Petition for Review of an Order of the Board of Immigration Appeals
BIA No. A074 588 884

---

Before REAVLEY, DENNIS, and SOUTHWICK, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:*

Cirilo Padilla-Navarro, a native and citizen of Mexico, appeals from the Board of Immigration Appeals's ("BIA") summary affirmance of the immigration judge's ("IJ") denial of his motion to reopen and to sua sponte reopen his removal proceedings. He argues that his removal proceedings should have been reopened based on an intervening change in the law relating to the physical presence requirement necessary for suspension of deportation, that the BIA's summary affirmance procedures violated his due process rights and were improperly used given the circumstances of his case, and that the IJ erred in determining in his initial order that Padilla was ineligible for suspension of deportation.

No. 14-60090

We review the denial of a motion to reopen for abuse of discretion. Zhao v. Gonzales, 404 F.3d 295, 303 (5th Cir. 2005). When the BIA summarily affirms the IJ's decision without opinion, as in this case, we review the IJ's decision. Galvez-Vergara v. Gonzales, 484 F.3d 798, 801 (5th Cir. 2007).

Padilla's motion to reopen was untimely, as it was filed 15 years after the IJ's decision. Padilla has not shown that his untimeliness should be excused based on a statutory exception. See 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(7)(C)(i); 8 C.F.R. § 1003.2(c)(2). Padilla therefore has not shown that the IJ's denial of his motion to reopen was an abuse of discretion. In addition, we do not have jurisdiction to consider his argument that the IJ erred by denying his request to sua sponte reopen his removal proceedings. See Enriquez-Alvarado v. Ashcroft, 371 F.3d 246, 249-50 (5th Cir. 2004). Accordingly, this portion of his petition for review is dismissed. See Ramos-Bonilla v. Mukasey, 543 F.3d 216, 220 (5th Cir. 2008).

Padilla next argues that the IJ, by failing to sua sponte reopen, ignored an intervening change in the law regarding his physical presence in the United States, an alleged change set forth in In re Avilez-Nava, 23 I. & N. Dec. 799, 805 (BIA 2005). The IJ's decision not to sua sponte reopen his proceedings was entirely discretionary. The IJ stated that even if Avilez-Nava were applicable, she would still not sua sponte reopen Padilla's proceedings because he had ignored a previous voluntary departure order and because he continued to violate this country's immigration laws.

No. 14-60090

Padilla also argues the BIA failed to follow In re X-G-W, 22 I. & N. Dec. 71, 74 (BIA 1998), in which the BIA exercised its authority to sua sponte reopen a case based on a change in asylum law, and therefore he met the requirements for a written opinion and submission to a three-member panel. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(4)(i), (e)(6)(ii), (iii). Under the circumstances, Padilla has not shown that the BIA erred by failing to issue a written opinion or by failing to submit his case to a three-member panel. See § 1003.1(e)(4)(i), (e)(5). Moreover, Padilla has not shown that the BIA's summary affirmance of the IJ's decision violated his due process rights. See Soadjede v. Ashcroft, 324 F.3d 830, 832-33 (5th Cir. 2003).

Finally, Padilla concedes that review of the IJ's underlying decision denying suspension of deportation is not before this court because he did not seek administrative or judicial review of that decision. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(1) (requiring a petition for review to be filed within thirty days of the final administrative order of removal); Kane v. Holder, 581 F.3d 231, 237 n.14 (5th Cir. 2009).
