HCA, Inc. (“HCA”), seeking to recover the cost of a defense it provided for ABM Industries, Inc. (“ABM”).

The dispute arose out of a vehicular accident. Elizabeth Easley was injured when a shuttle bus owned by HCA<sup>1</sup> but operated by a third-party contractor, ABM,<sup>2</sup> crashed into a pole. HCA had an insurance policy with ACE that covered vehicles it owned, as well as permissive operators of its vehicles (such as ABM), subject to a $1 million deductible that was eroded by defense costs. The policy stated that HCA “will pay all sums the ‘insured’ [including ABM] becomes legally obligated to pay within the Deductible.” ABM, meanwhile, had an insurance policy with Liberty that covered vehicles it owned but that was “excess” to “other insurance” carried on non-owned vehicles (such as HCA’s bus).

Easley sued ABM for her injuries. ABM tendered the defense to Liberty. Liberty attempted to tender the defense to ACE and HCA, asserting that the ACE/HCA insurance policy on the vehicle was primary, but ACE and HCA denied the tender. Liberty defended and settled the lawsuit; the total cost of defense and settlement was less than $1 million. Liberty, as subrogee of ABM, subsequently filed this action in federal court, seeking to recoup its defense costs from HCA and ACE. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of Liberty, finding that the HCA/ACE policy provided “primary” insurance on the vehicle and that HCA had agreed, under the policy, to pay for any liability created by its “insured,” including ABM. ordered HCA to pay for the attorneys' fees incurred in defending the underlying action but denied Liberty's request for fees incurred in bringing the instant action.

We have studied the briefs, read the applicable authorities, and heard the arguments of counsel; we are convinced under the peculiar facts of this case that the district court made no reversible error.<sup>3</sup> We are further convinced that the district court did not err in denying Liberty's additional request for joint and several liability as to ACE and did not abuse its discretion in denying attorneys' fees pursuant to Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code § 38.001(8).

AFFIRMED.
