Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas
USDC Nos. 5:21-CV-71, 5:23-CV-77

Before KING, DUNCAN, and ENGELHARDT, Circuit Judges.

STUART KYLE DUNCAN, Circuit Judge:

We again consider constitutional challenges to the Horseracing Integrity and Safety Act of 2020 (“HISA”). In HISA, Congress empowered a private corporation—the Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority (“Authority”)—to create and enforce nationwide rules for thoroughbred horseracing. Last time, we held HISA facially unconstitutional under the private nondelegation doctrine because the Authority’s rulemaking was not subordinate to the Federal Trade Commission (“FTC”). See Nat’l Horsemen’s Benevolent & Protective Ass’n v. Black (Horsemen’s I), 53 F.4th 869 (5th Cir. 2022). At the time, we did not consider a separate nondelegation challenge to the Authority’s enforcement power. Congress responded to our decision by amending HISA, giving the FTC power to abrogate, add to, or modify the Authority’s rules.

On remand, the district court held the amendment cured HISA’s constitutional deficiencies because the FTC now has general rulemaking power over the Authority’s activities. It also rejected claims raised by a new plaintiff, Gulf Coast Racing LLC (“Gulf Coast”), that HISA violates the Constitution’s Appointments Clause because the Authority wields significant governmental authority. The plaintiffs all appealed, arguing HISA is still constitutionally deficient under the private nondelegation doctrine, the Due Process Clause, the Appointments Clause, and the Tenth Amendment.

We agree with nearly all of the district court’s well-crafted opinion. Specifically, we agree that the FTC’s new rulemaking oversight means the agency is no longer bound by the Authority’s policy choices. In other words, the amendment solved the nondelegation problem with the Authority’s rulemaking power. We also agree that HISA does not violate the Due Process Clause by putting financially interested private individuals in charge of competitors. Further, we agree that, under current Supreme Court precedent, see Lebron v. Nat’l R.R. Passenger Corp., 513 U.S. 374 (1995), the Authority does not qualify as a government entity subject to the Appointments Clause. Finally, we agree that plaintiff Gulf Coast lacks standing to bring its Tenth Amendment challenge.

We disagree with the district court in one important respect, however: HISA’s enforcement provisions violate the private nondelegation doctrine. The statute empowers the Authority to investigate, issue subpoenas, conduct searches, levy fines, and seek injunctions—all without the FTC’s say-so. That is forbidden by the Constitution. We therefore DECLARE that HISA’s enforcement provisions are facially unconstitutional on that ground. In doing so, we part ways with our esteemed colleagues on the Sixth Circuit. See Oklahoma v. United States, 62 F.4th 221 (6th Cir. 2023) (rejecting nondelegation challenge to HISA’s enforcement provisions).

Accordingly, the district court’s judgment is AFFIRMED in part and REVERSED in part.

No. 23-10520

I. BACKGROUND

A. HISA Framework

In 2020, HISA created a framework for enacting and enforcing nationwide rules governing doping, medication control, and racetrack safety in the thoroughbred horseracing industry. See 15 U.S.C. § 3054(a). See generally Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 873–75. To “develop[] and implement[]” these rules, HISA empowers a “private, independent, self-regulatory, nonprofit corporation, to be known as the ‘Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority,’” subject to the “oversight” of the FTC. §§ 3052(a), 3053.

Under HISA, the Authority writes all the rules—that is, rules fleshing out the substantive areas covered by HISA, as well as rules governing investigation, adjudication, and sanctions.¹ The Authority submits proposed rules to the FTC, which publishes them for public comment. § 3053(b)(1), (c)(1). Rules take effect only after FTC approval, which must occur within 60 days of publication. The FTC “shall approve” a proposed rule if it finds the rule “consistent” with the Act and with “applicable rules approved by the [FTC].” § 3053(c)(2). Originally, this “consistency review” did not allow the FTC to reject a proposed rule based on its disagreement with the Authority’s policy choices. Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 884–87. In Horsemen’s I, we held that this arrangement violated the private nondelegation doctrine by making a private entity superior to a government agency. Ibid. In response, Congress amended HISA to give the FTC power to “abrogate, add to, and modify” the Authority’s rules. § 3053(e).

The Authority also has the power to enforce HISA. It does so by (1) exercising “subpoena and investigatory authority,” § 3054(h); (2) imposing civil sanctions, §§ 3054(i), 3057; and (3) filing civil actions seeking injunctions or enforcement of sanctions, § 3054(j). The actual work of enforcing HISA involves a further delegation to other entities, however. For instance, HISA directs the Authority to contract enforcement of doping and medication rules to a private non-profit, the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency (“USADA”), or other comparable entity. § 3054(e)(1)(A), (B).² USADA then acts as “the independent . . . enforcement organization” for those rules, “implement[s]” HISA’s anti-doping programs, and exercises related powers “including independent investigations, charging and adjudication of potential medication control rule violations, and the enforcement of any civil sanctions for such violations.” § 3054(e)(1)(E)(i), (iii), (iv); § 3055(c)(4)(B).³ USADA’s decisions on such matters “shall be the final decision or civil sanction of the Authority,” subject to de novo review by an administrative law judge (“ALJ”) and the FTC. § 3055(c)(4)(B); § 3058.

B. Procedural History

Horsemen’s I concluded that HISA’s delegation of rulemaking power was facially unconstitutional. HISA delegated rulemaking power to a private organization (the Authority) whose policy choices could not be second-guessed by the agency (FTC). The Authority's rulemaking powers were therefore not subordinate to the FTC, meaning HISA facially violated the private nondelegation doctrine. Horsemen's I, 53 F.4th at 872. We did not consider the plaintiffs' distinct nondelegation challenges to the Authority's investigative and enforcement powers nor their due process claims. Id. at 890 n.37. Finally, as noted, Congress responded to Horsemen's I by empowering the FTC to "abrogate, add to, and modify" the Authority's rules. § 3053(e).

On remand, the National Horsemen's Association ("Horsemen") and Texas continued to press their private nondelegation claims, arguing Congress's amendment did not actually subordinate Authority rulemaking to the FTC. They also continued to press their nondelegation challenge to the Authority's enforcement powers (as well as their due process claims). In addition, a new plaintiff, Gulf Coast Racing ("Gulf Coast"), raised separate challenges to HISA in a different division of the same district. See Nat'l Horsemen's Benevolent & Protective Ass'n v. Black (Black), 672 F. Supp. 3d 220, 224 (N.D. Tex. 2023). Gulf Coast claimed (1) HISA's directors qualify as "officers of the United States" and are therefore subject to Article II's appointment and removal requirements; and (2) HISA commandeers Texas in violation of the Tenth Amendment. Gulf Coast's suit was consolidated with the remanded Horsemen's I case. Id. at 230–31. Following a one-day bench trial, the district court rejected all the plaintiffs' claims.

As to private nondelegation, the district court followed the Sixth Circuit's decision in Oklahoma, 62 F.4th 221. That court reasoned that Congress's amendment empowering the FTC to "abrogate, add to, and modify" proposed rules "cured the constitutional issues identified by [Horsemen's I]" by making the Authority's rulemaking power "subordinate" to the FTC. Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 241, 243 (citing Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 230, 232). As to the separate challenge to the Authority's enforcement powers, the district court largely relied on its previous order rejecting the claim because those powers “comport with due process.” See id. at 248. The court also relied on the fact that the FTC could review civil sanctions and control enforcement through rulemaking. Id. at 248–49; see also Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 231. Finally, the court rejected the due process claims because the Horsemen failed to show the Authority’s directors have financial interests in regulating competitors. Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 252.

As to Gulf Coast’s claims, the district court concluded that our Horsemen’s I decision required it to reject them. Specifically, the court reasoned that Horsemen’s I necessarily decided the Authority was a private entity, and so its directors were not subject to the Appointments Clause. Id. at 234–37. Alternatively, the court reasoned that the Authority is private because “it is not government created, and its directors are not government appointed.” Id. at 234 (citing Lebron, 513 U.S. 374). Finally, the court rejected the Tenth Amendment commandeering argument for lack of standing. Id. at 250.

Accordingly, the district court entered final judgment dismissing all claims. The Horsemen, Texas, and Gulf Coast timely appealed.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

We review the district court’s legal conclusions following a bench trial de novo. Deloach Marine Servs., L.L.C. v. Marquette Transp. Co., 974 F.3d 601, 606 (5th Cir. 2020). To prevail on their facial challenge, the plaintiffs “must show that no set of circumstances exists under which [HISA] would be valid.” Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 878 (cleaned up) (citations omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

The various plaintiffs raise these issues on appeal:

No. 23-10520

(A) Did Congress’s amendment to HISA cure the private nondelegation problem with the Authority’s rulemaking powers?

(B) Do the Authority’s enforcement powers separately violate the private nondelegation doctrine?

(C) Does HISA violate due process by permitting self-interested industry participants to regulate their competitors?

(D) Are the Authority’s directors subject to the Appointments Clause?

(E) Does HISA violate the Tenth Amendment’s anti-commandeering rule by forcing States to administer a federal program?

We consider each issue in turn.

A. Private Nondelegation Challenge to Authority’s Rulemaking.

We previously discussed the origins of the private nondelegation doctrine in Horsemen’s I. See id. at 880–81. In essence, the doctrine teaches that “a private entity may wield government power only if it ‘functions subordinately’ to an agency with ‘authority and surveillance’ over it.” Id. at 881 & n.21 (citing Texas v. Rettig, 987 F.3d 518, 532 (5th Cir. 2021)); Pittston Co. v. United States, 368 F.3d 385, 394 (4th Cir. 2004); United States v. Frame, 885 F.2d 1119, 1128 (3d Cir. 1989)).⁴ Or, as our sister circuit has explained: “Congress may formalize the role of private parties in proposing regulations so long as that role is merely as an aid to a government agency that retains the discretion to approve, disapprove, or modify them.” Ass’n of Am. R.R.s v. U.S. Dep’t of Transp. (Amtrak I), 721 F.3d 666, 671 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (cleaned

In Horsemen's I, we ruled the Authority's rulemaking power was an unconstitutional private delegation. Our analysis focused on the fact that the Authority's proposed rules were subject only to the FTC's limited "consistency review," which did not permit the agency to second-guess the Authority's policy choices. See Horsemen's I, 53 F.4th at 882–87. In response, Congress amended HISA to provide that:

[the FTC], by rule in accordance with section 553 of title 5, may abrogate, add to, and modify the rules of the Authority promulgated in accordance with this chapter as the Commission finds necessary or appropriate to ensure the fair administration of the Authority, to conform the rules of the Authority to requirements of this chapter and applicable rules approved by the Commission, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this chapter.

15 U.S.C. § 3053(e). This new provision was borrowed from the Maloney Act, which allocates authority between the SEC and private, self-regulatory organizations (such as the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority ("FINRA")). See Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 231–32. Although HISA was originally modeled on the Maloney Act, it lacked this provision until the recent amendment. See Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2023, Pub. L. 117-328, div. O, tit. VII, § 701, 136 Stat. 4459, 5231–32. As noted, the district court followed the Sixth Circuit in ruling that the amendment cured the nondelegation problem with the Authority's rulemaking power. See Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 241 (citing Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 230, 232).

We agree with the district court and the Sixth Circuit that the amendment cured the nondelegation defect identified in Horsemen's I. That defect lay in the agency's being at the mercy of the Authority's policy choices. See Horsemen's I, 53 F.4th at 872 ("[T]he FTC concedes it cannot review the Authority’s policy choices.”). For instance, when the Authority issued rules on the kinds of horseshoes permitted during races, the FTC told objecting commenters it lacked the power to question the Authority’s views. See id. at 885 (discussing Order Approving the Enforcement Rule Proposed by the Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority, 26, FED. TRADE COMM’N (Mar. 25, 2022)). The amendment has corrected that imbalance. Now, the FTC may “abrogate, add to, and modify” the Authority’s rules. § 3053(e). So, unlike before, if the FTC now disagrees with the policies reflected in the Authority’s rules, it may change them. See Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 230 (noting recent rule explaining that FTC’s “new ‘rulemaking power’ allows it to ‘exercise its own policy choices’” (quoting Order Ratifying Previous Commission Orders 3, FED. TRADE COMM’N (Jan. 3, 2023))). As the Sixth Circuit correctly observed, “§ 3053(e)’s amended text gives the FTC ultimate discretion over the content of the rules,” which “makes the FTC the primary rule-maker, and leaves the Authority as the secondary, the inferior, the subordinate one.” Ibid. (citing Adkins, 310 U.S. at 388).

Appellants’ arguments to the contrary do not persuade us.

First, the Horsemen argue the Authority remains superior because it continues to write the rules in the first place and the agency must approve them if they hurdle the low bar of consistency review. We disagree. The problem was never that the private entity proposed the rules; the problem was that the agency lacked power to second-guess them once they were proposed. See Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 884 (“The FTC’s oversight is too limited to ensure the Authority functions subordinately to the agency.” (cleaned up) (quoting Adkins, 310 U.S. at 399)). Now the FTC has been given that power: it can “abrogate” or “modify” Authority rules it disagrees with. § 3053(e). And that new power gives consistency review new bite. Previously, consistency review “exclude[d] . . . the Authority’s policy choices in formulating rules.” Id. at 885. Now it implicitly includes review of those choices. The FTC must approve only those rules “consistent with . . . applicable rules approved by the [FTC],” and, thanks to the amendment, it is the FTC that has final word over what those rules are. § 3053(c)(2); see also Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 231 (explaining that “the FTC’s later authority to modify any rules for any reason at all, including policy disagreements, ensures that the FTC retains ultimate[] authority over the implementation of the Horseracing Act”).⁵

Next, the Horsemen argue the FTC’s new review power creates a timing problem. Because the FTC may alter only rules “promulgated” by the Authority, § 3053(e), regulated entities may end up being subject to the Authority’s rules until the FTC can intervene and fix them. We disagree. The FTC has 60 days to approve or disapprove a proposed rule. § 3053(c)(1). If the FTC is concerned about a proposed rule going into effect, then it can intervene and create safeguards to prevent that from happening. See § 3053(a) (requiring Authority to submit proposed rules to FTC “in accordance with such rules as the [FTC] may prescribe”). For instance, the agency could adopt a rule postponing the effective date of a newly enacted rule. See Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 232 (suggesting this). Or the agency could engage in emergency rulemaking to delay the effective date of a rule. In any event, these are hypothetical problems that, if they arise, can be addressed in as-applied challenges. See Hersh v. United States ex rel. Mukasey, 553 F.3d 743,

762 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that “as-applied challenges are preferred”). This is a facial challenge, however, and we cannot say that a potential timing gap in FTC’s § 3053(e) review makes HISA unconstitutional in all its applications. See United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 745 (1987) (holding that a facial challenger “must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid”).⁶

Finally, the Horsemen point to the SEC’s supervisory authority over private self-regulatory organizations like FINRA. They argue that, notwithstanding § 3053(e), the FTC still has less sway over the Authority than the SEC does over FINRA. We again disagree. We previously pointed out that the “key distinction” between the FTC and the SEC was the FTC’s lack of general rulemaking power. See Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 887–88. “The SEC itself,” we explained, “can make changes to FINRA rules, but the FTC can only recommend changes to the Authority’s rules.” Id. at 888 (citation omitted). But Congress has now amended HISA to give the FTC the same general rulemaking authority that the SEC has with respect to FINRA. See Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 225 (reaching this conclusion).

In sum, we agree with the district court and the Sixth Circuit that, in light of Congress’s amendment to HISA in § 3053(e), the Authority’s rulemaking power is subordinate to the FTC’s. Because the FTC has ultimate say on what the rules are, the Authority’s power to propose horseracing rules does not violate the private nondelegation doctrine.

⁶ The Horsemen also argue that the Authority can circumvent the FTC by issuing unreviewable guidance documents, such as dear colleague letters. We disagree. The Authority admits such guidance would not have the force of law and, even if it did, the FTC has authority to review guidance documents, § 3054(g)(2), and to promulgate a rule overruling guidance it disagrees with.

No. 23-10520

B. Private Nondelegation Challenge to Authority's Enforcement.

Appellants next argue that, apart from its rulemaking powers, the Authority's enforcement powers violate the private nondelegation doctrine. Recall that the Authority enforces HISA by levying sanctions, which are ultimately subject to FTC review, and by bringing lawsuits. The Authority also has power to investigate potential violations, although the actual investigatory work is contracted to other private organizations, such as USADA in the case of doping rules, or to state racing commissions in the case of racetrack safety rules. See supra I.A. Our Horsemen's I decision did not address this challenge to the Authority's enforcement powers, see 53 F.4th at 890 n.37, and on remand the district court treated it as a due process claim and rejected it. See Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 248–49. Appellants now bring the claim to us, arguing that the Authority's enforcement power is not subordinate to FTC oversight.

Before addressing the merits of this claim, we must address the Authority's argument that it is premature. Arguing both in terms of standing and ripeness, the Authority contends that it has not yet tried to enforce HISA against the Horsemen and that any challenge to the Authority's enforcement power can be raised if and when it does. We disagree for several reasons.

First, the Authority misunderstands the Horsemen's claim. They do not challenge some particular enforcement action undertaken by the Authority—claiming, for instance, that the Authority issued an overbroad subpoena for medical records or lacked probable cause to search a racetrack. Instead, the Horsemen argue that HISA, on its face, vests the Authority with enforcement power that is effectively unreviewable by the agency. When a regulated entity raises “a purely legal challenge” like this one, “it is unnecessary to wait for the Regulation to be applied in order to determine its legality.” Contender Farms, L.L.P. v. U.S. Dep’t of Agric., 779 F.3d 258, 267 (5th Cir. 2015) (cleaned up) (citations omitted); see also Nat’l Env’t Developmental Ass’n’s Clean Air Project v. EPA, 752 F.3d 999, 1008 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (“Petitioner’s challenge in this case presents a purely legal question . . . It is unnecessary to wait for the [statute] to be applied in order to determine its legality.”); Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 163 (2014) (“Nothing in this Court’s decisions requires a plaintiff who wishes to challenge the constitutionality of a law to confess that he will in fact violate that law.”).

Second, the Horsemen have a cognizable injury for standing purposes. Pursuant to HISA, they have already had to agree “to be subject to and comply with [Authority’s] rules, standards, and procedures”—including rules requiring they cooperate with investigations, consent to searches, and comply with subpoenas. See 15 U.S.C. § 3054(c)–(f). In other words, the Horsemen are themselves “objects of the Regulation,” and so “there is ordinarily little question” that they have standing to challenge it. Contender Farms, 779 F.3d at 264–65 (quoting Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561–62 (1992)). And courts typically do not require a regulated party to “bet the farm” by violating a regulation before allowing it to test its validity. Free Enter. Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477, 490 (2010); see also, e.g., Metro. Wash. Airports Auth. v. Citizens for Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252, 265 n.13 (1991) (explaining that a separation-of-powers challenge to a board’s veto powers was “ripe even if the veto power ha[d] not been exercised to respondents’ detriment”).

Finally, the record shows several instances in which the Authority has enforced HISA against the Horsemen. For example, the Authority has threatened one of the Horsemen’s members with sanctions if it did not repair a racetrack railing. Additionally, the Authority has both threatened and actually barred member racetracks in Texas from broadcasting races out of state because they failed to register with the Authority. More generally, the Horsemen represent some 30,000 members and, when the parties filed their briefs, the Authority’s website already listed hundreds of enforcement actions—and that number has now grown to over 1,500.⁷ So, at a minimum, the Horsemen have shown a credible threat that the Authority will bring enforcement actions against their members in the future. See Driehaus, 573 U.S. at 164.

In sum, the Horsemen have standing to challenge the Authority’s enforcement powers and that challenge is ripe. We proceed to the merits.

The Horsemen’s (as well as Texas’s) basic contention is that HISA grants the Authority enforcement power that is effectively unreviewable by the FTC. That claim turns on the same standard as the challenge to the Authority’s rulemaking addressed in Horsemen’s I: the delegation is constitutional if, when enforcing HISA, the Authority “‘functions subordinately’ to an agency with ‘authority and surveillance’ over it.” 53 F.4th at 881 (quoting Rettig, 987 F.3d at 532). In other words, the Authority may constitutionally enforce HISA only if it acts “as an aid” to the FTC, which “retains the discretion to approve, disapprove, or modify” the private entity’s enforcement actions. Ibid. (cleaned up) (quoting Amtrak I, 721 F.3d at 671).⁸

⁷ See generally Rulings, HORSERACING INTEGRITY & SAFETY AUTH., <https://portal.hisausapps.org/public-rulings> (last visited June 12, 2024) (listing 1,772 enforcement rulings).

⁸ As explained in Horsemen’s I, the D.C. Circuit’s Amtrak I decision was vacated only because the Supreme Court found Amtrak was a governmental, as opposed to private,

No. 23-10520

While the constitutional standard is the same, the nature of the delegated authority is different this time around. Horsemen’s I addressed delegation of legislative authority—the power to make rules. See Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 186 (1926) (“The essence of the legislative authority is to . . . prescribe rules for the regulation of the society[.]”). Logically, we focused on which actor—government agency or private entity?—had final say over the content of those rules. See Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 884–87 (analyzing FTC’s lack of authority over the Authority’s policy choices). Today, by contrast, we address delegation of executive authority. The power to launch an investigation, to search for evidence, to sanction, to sue—these are all quintessentially executive functions.⁹ And they have been considered so from our Nation’s founding.¹⁰ As much as legislative power, the private nondelegation doctrine forbids unaccountable delegations of executive power. See, e.g., Amtrak II, 575 U.S. at 62 (Alito, J., concurring) (“Private entities are not vested with ‘legislative powers.’ Art. I, § 1. Nor are they vested with the ‘executive Power,’ Art. II, § 1, cl. 1, which belongs to the President.”). Accordingly, we must determine whether HISA delegates enforcement power to private entities and, if so, whether that power is subordinate to the FTC.

HISA divides enforcement authority among the FTC, the Authority, and USADA, “each within the scope of their powers and responsibilities under this chapter.” § 3054(a). Recall that USADA is the private non-profit to whom the Authority must delegate anti-doping and medication enforcement. See § 3054(e)(1)(A).¹¹ So, the answer to the question before us turns on what “powers and responsibilities” each of these three entities has under HISA. Although HISA somewhat confusingly disperses the relevant provisions throughout the Act, we can discern the following division of labor.

First, the Authority has responsibility for (1) investigating potential violations, including by issuing subpoenas (§ 3054(h)); (2) levying sanctions (§§ 3054(j)(1), 3057, 3058(a)); and (3) bringing suit against violators for injunctive relief or to enforce sanctions (§ 3054(j)(1)–(2)). Second, actual enforcement of doping and medication rules is done by USADA, which “implements” those rules “on behalf of the Authority.” § 3054(e)(1)(E)(i). In this regard, USADA’s responsibilities include “independent investigations, charging and adjudication of potential medication control rule violations, and the enforcement of any civil sanctions for such violations.” § 3055(c)(4)(B); see also § 3054(e)(1)(E)(iv). Third, the FTC may ask an ALJ to review any sanction de novo, § 3058(b)(1), and the FTC may itself review the ALJ’s decision de novo, either on its own motion or upon petition by an aggrieved party. § 3058(c).

The Act’s plain terms permit only one conclusion: HISA is enforced by a private entity, the Authority. The Authority decides whether to investigate a covered entity for violating HISA’s rules. The Authority decides whether to subpoena the entity’s records or search its premises. The Authority decides whether to sanction it. And the Authority decides whether to sue the entity for an injunction or to enforce a sanction it has imposed. To be sure, the Authority does not perform these functions itself. Rather, HISA requires the Authority to contract with another private entity, USADA, which undertakes enforcement “on behalf of the Authority.”

Authority remains in charge, however, and dictates the “scope of work, performance metrics, reporting obligations, budgets, and any other matter [it] considers appropriate.” § 3054(e)(2)(B).

No. 23-10520

§ 3054(e)(1)(E)(i). The bottom line, though, is that a private entity, not the agency, is in charge of enforcing HISA.

Consider also what HISA does not say. It does not empower the FTC to decide whether to investigate a covered entity, whether to subpoena its records, whether to search its premises, whether to charge it with a violation, or whether to sanction or sue it. Nor does the Act empower the FTC to countermand any of the Authority’s investigatory or charging decisions (or, more precisely, USADA’s decisions). Nor does it require the Authority or USADA to seek the FTC’s approval before investigating, searching, charging, sanctioning, or suing. All these actions are enforcement actions, and, by the plain terms of the Act, they can be done by the private entities without the FTC’s involvement.

The inescapable conclusion is that the Authority does not “function subordinately” to the FTC when enforcing HISA. Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 881. That is not permitted under the private nondelegation doctrine. A private entity that can investigate potential violations, issue subpoenas, conduct searches, levy fines, and seek injunctions—all without the say-so of the agency—does not operate under that agency’s “authority and surveillance.” Ibid. Put another way, with respect to enforcement, HISA’s plain terms show that the Authority does not merely act “as an aid” to the FTC because the FTC does not “retain[] the discretion to approve, disapprove, or modify” the Authority’s enforcement actions. Ibid. (cleaned up) (quoting Amtrak I, 721 F.3d at 671).

One might counter, though, that the FTC at least partially supervises the Authority because it can review sanctions at the back end, after ALJ review. See §§ 3055(c)(4)(B), 3058(b)(3)–(c)(3). That is true, and it is the

No. 23-10520

Authority's best argument for why its enforcement power is subordinate to the FTC.

The argument nonetheless fails. Suppose the Authority sanctions a horse owner for a doping violation, but the sanction is later reversed by the FTC. Does that make the Authority's enforcement power subordinate to the agency? No, it does not. Consider everything the Authority was permitted to do up to that point: launch an investigation into the owner, subpoena his records, search his facilities, charge him with a violation, adjudicate it, and fine him.¹² Each and every one of those actions is "enforcement" of HISA. Each can occur under HISA without any supervision by the FTC. Moreover, penalties imposed by the Authority are not automatically stayed pending appeal. See 16 C.F.R. § 1.148(a). So, any penalty goes into effect as soon as the Authority makes its decision, unless the ALJ or FTC exercises its discretion to implement a stay pending appeal. See § 3058(d).

¹² Not only does HISA facially permit that, but it has already happened. For example, in one currently active and undecided FTC appeal, it is uncontested that three private Authority investigators showed up at the appellant's residence and served her with a notice of an alleged doping violation (there is no personal service requirement under the statute). The investigators then "subjected [the appellant] to a coercive interrogation in a small room" and searched "her barn and . . . her mother's car" for banned substances. Statement of Contested Facts and Specification of Additional Evidence, In re Lynch, 9423 F.T.C. 1, 3-4 (Mar. 1, 2024). She was then fined $55,000 and banned from racing for 48 months. Id. at 5-6. Authority investigators have also searched defendants' property and extracted fines under HISA's strict liability regime for possession of banned substances. For example, one veterinarian forgot to clean out his trailer and still had two buckets of a newly banned substance two weeks after the effective date. Private Authority investigators searched his trailer, found the buckets, fined him $5,000, and banned him from practice for 14 months. The ALJ affirmed on appeal. All this despite the fact that the Authority and the ALJ conceded that the appellant purchased the substance long before it was banned, forgot it was in his trailer, and did not even attempt to use it on a horse. In re Perez, 9420 F.T.C. 1, 5-6 (Mar. 18, 2024); see also In re Poole, 9417 F.T.C. 1, 5-6, 10 (Nov. 13, 2023) (affirming an $18,000 fine and banning him from practice for 22 months for a similar inadvertent possession of a newly banned substance).

It is no answer to say that the FTC can come in at the tail-end of this adversarial process and review the sanction. As far as enforcement goes, the horse was already out of the barn. (You knew that was coming.) Besides, what if the sanctioned owner, instead of fighting the process, opts to settle for a lower fine? In that case, according to the Authority's logic, no one has enforced HISA. That is obviously not true. To the contrary, the settlement scenario—which will likely happen often—only underscores that it is the private entity that acts as HISA's enforcer in any meaningful sense.

Consider a hypothetical. Suppose a city structures its speeding laws to let a group of private car enthusiasts monitor speeds with their own radar guns, pull speeders over, and ticket them. Fines are reviewed by the police department and, ultimately, the mayor. Who enforces the speeding laws? Anyone would say the private group. After all, consider how many cases we decide concerning whether the police have wrongly stopped someone or used excessive force during the stop. See, e.g., Terrell v. Town of Woodworth, No. 23-30510, 2024 WL 667690 (5th Cir. Feb. 19, 2024) (per curiam). All would agree that the police were “enforcing” the law when they stopped the person. The same goes for the private entity in the hypothetical.

The Authority's argument, moreover, does not work even on its own terms. In addition to levying fines, HISA empowers the Authority to sue people and racetracks to enjoin past, present, or impending violations. See § 3054(j)(1) (providing “the Authority may commence a civil action against a covered person or racetrack that has engaged, is engaged, or is about to engage, in acts or practices constituting a violation of this chapter . . . to enjoin such acts or practices”); § 3054(j)(2) (allowing issuance of “a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order . . . without bond”). HISA gives the FTC no role in this process, either before or after the fact. So, even assuming the Authority is correct (and it is not) that the agency's after-the-fact supervision of sanctions makes the Authority subordinate, the Authority is demonstrably not subordinate when it comes to suing violators for injunctions. That is plainly an unsupervised delegation of executive power that the Constitution does not tolerate. See Buckley, 424 U.S. at 138 (“A lawsuit is the ultimate remedy for a breach of the law, and it is to the President . . . that the Constitution entrusts [this] responsibility[.]”).

The Authority next argues that the FTC could use its new rulemaking authority to rein in the Authority’s enforcement actions or even require the Authority to preclear lawsuits with the agency. See § 3053(e) (empowering FTC to “abrogate, add to, and modify” the Authority’s rules). This argument persuaded the Sixth Circuit that at least a facial challenge to the Authority’s enforcement powers should fail. See Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 231 (through § 3053(e) rulemaking, “the FTC could subordinate every aspect of the Authority’s enforcement,” which “suffices to defeat a facial challenge”). And we have already found that the FTC’s rulemaking power has some purchase in turning back a facial challenge to the Authority’s rulemaking power: as explained, the agency could ensure via rulemaking that no Authority rule could go into effect until the agency had time to review it. See supra III.A. With great respect to our colleagues on the Sixth Circuit, however, we are not convinced that this rulemaking argument can save the Authority’s enforcement powers.

The Authority’s rulemaking argument would let the agency rewrite the statute. In HISA, Congress set out a definite enforcement scheme, dividing responsibilities among the FTC, the Authority, and USADA. See §§ 3054(e)(2), 3054(c)(1), 3054(e). HISA is quite clear about this: it provides that those three entities “implement and enforce” the Act, “each within the scope of their powers and responsibilities under this chapter.” § 3054(a)(1) (emphasis added). A mere agency cannot alter that statutory division of labor. See, e.g., Gulf Fishermen’s Ass’n v. Nat’l Marine Fisheries Serv., 968 F.3d 454, 460 (5th Cir. 2020) (“We will not defer to ‘an agency interpretation that is inconsistent with the design and structure of the statute as a whole.’” (quoting Util. Air. Regul. Grp. v. EPA, 573 U.S. 302, 321 (2014))); 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C) (authorizing courts to set aside agency action “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations”).¹³ As the Supreme Court recently reiterated, even “statutory permission to ‘modify’ does not authorize ‘basic and fundamental changes in the scheme’ designed by Congress.” Biden v. Nebraska, 600 U.S. ---, 143 S. Ct. 2355, 2368 (2023) (quoting MCI Telecomms. Corp. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 512 U.S. 218, 225 (1994)). Yet that is just what the Authority says the FTC could do through rulemaking.

Take the Authority’s power to seek injunctions. HISA empowers the Authority to file suit to enjoin violations, while saying nothing about FTC involvement in the process. See § 3054(j)(1). Yet the Authority suggests the FTC could, by rule, require the Authority to preclear any such action with the agency. We disagree. That would let the agency amend the enforcement scheme delineated by statute.¹⁴ The same goes for investigatory and subpoena power: HISA unqualifiedly gives that power to the Authority, see § 3054(h), and then requires the Authority to delegate it to USADA, see §§ 3054(e)(1)(E)(iv), 3055(c)(4) (the Authority “shall” contract with USADA to “conduct and oversee” anti-doping and medication enforcement “including independent investigations”). And the same goes for charging and adjudicating violations and levying sanctions. See ibid. (the Authority “shall” contract with USADA to “conduct and oversee . . . charging and adjudication of potential medication control rule violations, and the enforcement of any civil sanctions for such violations”); § 3054(j) (recognizing Authority’s power to impose “civil sanctions”). Congress enacted this reticulated scheme. The agency cannot amend it by promulgating a rule.

Furthermore, when Congress wanted to put the FTC in charge of enforcement, it knew how. Section 3059, for instance, is a separate part of HISA targeting certain “unfair or deceptive” practices in selling horses.¹⁵ With respect to that section, the Authority can only “recommend” that the

FTC “commence an enforcement action.”¹⁶ § 3054(c)(1)(B). In other words, only here did Congress limit the Authority’s enforcement discretion to “recommending” agency enforcement. Cf. § 3054(j)(1) (providing “the Authority may commence a civil action” seeking an injunction). Yet the Authority contends that the agency could, by rulemaking, make every enforcement action subject to similar FTC approval. That would rewrite the enforcement scheme Congress enacted. See Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 23 (1983) (“Where Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion.” (cleaned up) (citation omitted)).

Additionally, the Sixth Circuit believed the FTC could supervise the Authority through a slightly different kind of rulemaking—that is, by issuing rules governing how the Authority enforces HISA. See Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 231. For instance, the agency could issue rules against “overbroad subpoenas or onerous searches” or “provid[ing] a suspect with a full adversary proceeding and with free counsel.” Ibid. Unhappily, we again disagree with our sister circuit.

The Horsemen are not complaining about how the Authority exercises its enforcement power. They are complaining about where the enforcement power is lodged: on its face, HISA empowers private entities to enforce it and permits agency oversight only after the enforcement process is over and done with (and then only with respect to fines, not injunctions). If the Horsemen were objecting only to overbroad subpoenas, unwarranted searches, or lack of free counsel, perhaps those complaints could be addressed through rulemaking or as-applied challenges. But their complaint is different. They contend that HISA facially delegates unsupervised enforcement power to private actors. They are right.¹⁷

In sum, HISA's clear delineation of enforcement power between the FTC, the Authority, and USADA cannot be altered through rulemaking.

Finally, the Authority defends its enforcement role by analogizing it to the role of self-regulatory organizations (“SROs”)—specifically, FINRA—which assist the SEC in enforcing securities laws. The Authority seeks support in circuit cases concluding that FINRA's enforcement role presents no private nondelegation problem. See, e.g., Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 229, 232 (gathering cases).¹⁸ For their part, the Horsemen argue that, for ¹⁷ Moreover, consider the revealing premise of this line of argument. Suppose the FTC issued a rule saying, “The Authority can search racetracks only if it has probable cause.” Well and good, but that rule still presupposes the Authority is the one doing the search. Merely because the Authority would have to obey the Fourth Amendment does not change the fact that a private entity is searching your racetrack without agency say-so. And it is no answer to say that the agency could issue a rule saying, “The Authority can search racetracks only if the FTC approves the search.” That rule, as explained, would amend the statute's division of authority. See § 3054(h) (“The Authority shall have subpoena and investigatory authority with respect to civil violations committed under its jurisdiction.”).

¹⁸ The Sixth Circuit relied on several cases upholding the constitutionality of FINRA to hold that “[i]n case after case, the courts have upheld [the Maloney Act's] arrangement, reasoning that the SEC's ultimate control over the rules and their enforcement makes the SROs permissible aides and advisors.” Oklahoma, 62 F.4th at 229. We do not read those cases quite so broadly. They relied largely on the grounds that the SEC ultimately approves any proposed rules and has its own generalized rulemaking power. See, e.g., R. H. Johnson & Co. v. SEC, 198 F.2d 690, 696 (2d Cir. 1952) (considering only whether the SEC abused its discretion); Todd & Co. v. SEC, 557 F.2d 1008, 1012 (3d Cir. 1977) (considering only a nondelegation challenge to the SEC's legislative rulemaking authority); First Jersey Sec., Inc. v. Bergen, 605 F.2d 690, 697 (3d Cir. 1979) (same); Sorrell enforcement purposes, the FTC-Authority relationship is meaningfully different from the SEC-FINRA relationship. As we have before noted, HISA was modeled on the Maloney Act, which created FINRA. See Horsemen's I, 53 F.4th at 887; supra III.A. Moreover, we concluded in Horsemen's I that HISA lacked a key feature of the Maloney Act empowering the SEC to “abrogate, add to, and delete” rules proposed by FINRA. Horsemen's I, 53 F.4th at 887. As discussed, Congress added a similar provision to HISA, which remedied the nondelegation problem with the Authority’s rulemaking powers. Supra III.A.

We agree with the Horsemen that, for enforcement purposes, HISA gives the Authority an enforcement role meaningfully different from FINRA’s. Unlike the SEC-FINRA relationship, HISA does not give the FTC potent oversight power over the Authority’s enforcement such as the power to enforce HISA itself, deregister the Authority as the enforcing entity, or remove its directors.

To begin with, Congress empowered the SEC to enforce FINRA’s rules if needed. The SEC can “in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated, is violating, or is about to violate” the Maloney Act. 15 U.S.C. § 78u(a)(1). The SEC can also, on its own accord, seek criminal sanctions, injunctive relief, or disgorgement. § 78u(c), (d), (d)(4). The FTC cannot. See § 3054(c)(iii) (granting the Authority investigatory power); § 3054(e) (granting the Authority and USADA enforcement responsibility). The SEC has power to issue subpoenas, see §§ 77s(c), 78u(c), while HISA gives the Authority that power, § 3054(h), (c)(ii). The SEC can also revoke FINRA’s ability to

v. SEC, 679 F.2d 1323, 1325–26 (9th Cir. 1982) (same). But none addressed a nondelegation challenge to executive power.

No. 23-10520

enforce its rules, § 78s(g)(2), and step in and enforce any written rule itself, § 78o(b)(4). HISA gives the FTC none of these tools.

Moreover, HISA diverges radically from the Maloney Act in empowering the Authority to sue. The SEC alone has the power to bring civil suits, §§ 78u-1(a), 78u(d)(1), while HISA gives that power exclusively to the Authority, § 3054(j)(1). Giving a private entity the sole power to sue in federal court to enforce a statute cuts to the core of executive power. See Buckley, 424 U.S. at 138 (“A lawsuit is the ultimate remedy for a breach of the law, and it is to the President . . . that the Constitution entrusts [this] responsibility[.]”).¹⁹

Finally, the SEC “retains formidable oversight power to supervise, investigate, and discipline [FINRA] for any possible wrongdoing or regulatory missteps.” In re NYSE Specialists Sec. Litig., 503 F.3d 89, 101 (2d Cir. 2007). The FTC does not. This “formidable” power is manifest in the SEC’s ability to derecognize FINRA’s regulatory role entirely, §§ 78s(a)(3), (h)(1); remove FINRA board members for cause, § 78s(h)(4); remove any individual FINRA member, § 78s(h)(2); and bar any person from associating with FINRA, § 78o-3(g)(2). HISA, on the other hand, ¹⁹ One may reasonably ask whether HISA’s delegation of enforcement authority is supported by an analogous delegation in qui tam statutes. We think not. The Horsemen note our decision in Riley v. St. Luke’s Episcopal Hospital, 252 F.3d 749 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc), where we held that the False Claims Act (“FCA”) does not violate Article I’s Take Care Clause. They argue that Riley does not support HISA’s delegation because qui tam relators are episodic and do not have a continuing relationship with the government. That is true, but we see a more fundamental distinction between the two statutes: under the FCA, the executive branch has substantial power over qui tam relators that the FTC does not have over the Authority. For example, the United States can intervene in any qui tam litigation, take control of the litigation, veto settlement agreements, and dismiss the suit “notwithstanding the objections of the [relator].” Id. at 753–54. HISA gives the FTC none of those powers.

No. 23-10520

“recognize[s] for purposes of developing and implementing” the Act only “[t]he private, independent, self-regulatory, nonprofit corporation, to be known as the ‘Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority.’” § 3052(a). And only the Authority’s Board can remove members: directors by a two-thirds vote and committee members for any reason.²⁰

* * *

In sum, we agree with the Horsemen that the FTC lacks adequate oversight and control over the Authority’s enforcement power. HISA’s explicit division of enforcement responsibility empowers the Authority with quintessential executive functions and gives the FTC scant oversight until enforcement has already occurred. Such backend review by the FTC does not subordinate the Authority. And the FTC’s general rulemaking power provides no answer because executive rulemaking cannot amend the plain division of enforcement power laid out in HISA’s text. Such a radical delegation differs materially from the SEC-FINRA relationship because the FTC lacks any tools to ensure that the law is properly enforced. HISA’s enforcement provisions thus violate the private nondelegation doctrine.

C. Due Process Challenge

We turn next to the Horsemen’s challenge based on the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause. They argue that HISA, both facially and as-applied, deprives them of due process by permitting economically self-interested actors to regulate their competitors. See Carter Coal, 298 U.S. at 311 (government violates due process by allowing regulation by “private persons whose interests may be and often are adverse to the interests of others in the same business”). Specifically, the Horsemen contend that Carter Coal does not require proof of economic self-interest, only that the private person “may be” adverse to those he regulates. They then argue that several members of the Board and standing committees violate the conflict of interest provisions due to their professions and prior financial interests. Finally, the Horsemen contend that the statute fails to properly protect against self-interested actors because it does not cover financial interests other than interests in a covered horse, as opposed to a racetrack or other facility.

The district court correctly rejected these claims. As to the Horsemen’s facial challenge, the court concluded it was defeated by HISA’s conflict-of-interest provisions. See Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 252. Those provisions prohibit a range of individuals from serving as Board or independent committee members, § 3052(e), including individuals with financial interests in, or who provide goods or services to, covered horses; officials, officers, or policy makers for an equine industry; and employees, contractors, or immediate family members of the prior individuals. § 3052(e)(1)–(4).

As to the as-applied challenge, the district court rejected it on the facts. Following a bench trial, the court found the Horsemen relied only on the committee members’ biographical information but adduced no other evidence showing their adverse interests, financial or otherwise. See Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 252 (“HISA affords sufficient protection through its conflicts-of-interest provisions, and the plaintiffs have not met their burden to show unconstitutional self-dealing by directors, committee members, or others associated with the Authority.”). At most, the court observed that the biographical information may show the members do not qualify as “independent members.” Ibid.; § 3052(b)(1)(A) (“[I]ndependent members [must be] selected from outside the equine industry.”). But, as the court pointed out, even assuming that to be true, it says nothing about the members' financial interests. Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 252. On appeal, the Horsemen fail to show any error by the district court here.

D. Appointments Clause Challenge

A separate plaintiff, Gulf Coast, challenges the Authority's structure under the Appointments Clause of Article II.²¹ Recall that Gulf Coast raised this distinct challenge in a suit later consolidated with the Horsemen's. See id. at 230. Gulf Coast argues that, for constitutional purposes, the Authority is governmental, not private, and so is subject to the Appointments Clause. This means the Authority's directors, if they are principal officers, must be appointed by the President with Senate confirmation or, if they are inferior officers, by the President, courts, or department heads according to law. See Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 487–88; Cochran v. SEC, 20 F.4th 194, 198 (5th Cir. 2021) (en banc). The Authority's directors are not appointed in any of these ways,²² and so, if Gulf Coast is right, their appointment would violate Article II.

The Authority and the FTC first respond that we previously decided this question in Horsemen's I. By applying the private nondelegation doctrine to the Authority, they argue we necessarily determined the Authority is not governmental for constitutional purposes. The district court took this view as well. See Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 234. That is understandable. Challenges based on private nondelegation, on the one hand, and the Appointments Clause, on the other, appear mutually exclusive. For constitutional purposes, an entity is either governmental or not. See, e.g., LeBron, 513 U.S. at 378–79; Amtrak II, 575 U.S. at 50–51. That is why the Horsemen themselves call Gulf Coast’s claim “fundamentally incompatible” with their private nondelegation challenge. Texas seems to agree, noting that Gulf Coast’s Appointments Clause theory would apply only if “the Court disagree[s]” with its assumption that the Authority is private.

²² The directors are appointed by the Authority itself. See § 3052(d)(3) (Board members are selected by the Authority's nominating committee).

No. 23-10520

That said, however, we cannot agree that we decided this question in Horsemen’s I. The Appointments Clause question was never posed. Party presentation is a fundamental constraint on appellate decision-making. See United States v. Sineneng-Smith, 590 U.S. 371, 375–76 (2020) (“Courts . . . wait for cases to come to them, and when cases arise, courts normally decide only questions presented by the parties.” (cleaned up) (citation omitted)). The fact is that in Horsemen’s I, all parties proceeded on the assumption that the Authority is private for constitutional purposes. See Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 875 n.11 (“The Horsemen also claimed HISA was unconstitutional under the . . . Appointments Clause. The district court did not rule on those claims and so they are not before us.”). No one suggested that the Authority might qualify as a government entity or that its directors were subject to the Appointments Clause. So, because we did not settle the question previously, we can address it now. See Companion Prop. & Cas. Ins. v. Palermo, 723 F.3d 557, 561 (5th Cir. 2013) (“Appellate powers are limited to reviewing issues raised in, and decided by, the district court.” (cleaned up) (citation omitted)); Alpha/Omega Ins. Servs. v. Prudential Ins. of Am., 272 F.3d 276, 281 (5th Cir. 2001) (“[T]he law of the case doctrine only applies to issues we actually decided[.]”).

No. 23-10520

The basic premise of Gulf Coast’s argument is that the Authority is part of the federal government for Appointments Clause purposes. See Amtrak II, 575 U.S. at 50–51. We of course recognize that HISA calls the Authority private, as does the Authority’s own charter. See § 3052(a) (“The private, independent, self-regulatory, nonprofit corporation, to be known as the ‘Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority’ is recognized for purposes of developing and implementing [HISA].”); HISA Charter (“The Corporation is organized and shall be operated as a nonprofit business league[.]”). But deeming an entity “private” does not settle whether it is legally part of the federal government. Otherwise, the government could evade constitutional restrictions by mere labeling. See Lebron, 513 U.S. at 397 (“It surely cannot be that government, state or federal, is able to evade the most solemn obligations imposed in the Constitution by simply resorting to the corporate form.”). So, we must determine whether the Authority qualifies as part of the federal government for constitutional purposes.

The analysis guiding that inquiry comes from Lebron. In that case, the Supreme Court examined “the long history of corporations created and participated in by the United States for the achievement of governmental objectives.” Id. at 386.²³ The specific question before the Court was whether “Amtrak, though nominally a private corporation, must be regarded as a Government entity for First Amendment purposes.” Id. at 383. The answer was yes. That was so, the Court held, because “the Government create[d] [the Amtrak] corporation by special law, for the furtherance of governmental objectives, and retain[ed] for itself permanent authority to appoint a majority of the directors of that corporation.” Id. at 399. The Supreme Court and circuit courts have since used Lebron’s analysis to discern whether corporations are part of the government for constitutional purposes.²⁴ Applying Lebron, we conclude that the Authority is not a federal instrumentality for purposes of the Appointments Clause.

²³ See also id. at 386–91 (discussing corporations such as the first and second Banks of the United States, the Panama Railroad Company, the United States Grain Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Communications Satellite Corporation, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and the Legal Services Corporation).

First, the Authority was not created by the federal government “by special law,” ibid., but was incorporated under Delaware law shortly before HISA’s passage. Contrast this with Amtrak, which “Congress established” by enacting the Rail Passenger Service Act of 1970. Id. at 383–84; see also Nat’l R.R. Passenger Corp. v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 470 U.S. 451, 454 (1985) (observing “Congress established the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, a private, for-profit corporation that has come to be known as Amtrak”).

Second, the Authority was not created to further “governmental objectives,” Lebron, 513 U.S. at 399, but instead as a private association to address doping, medication, and safety issues in the thoroughbred racing ²⁴ See Nebraska, 143 S. Ct. at 2366–67 (applying Lebron to conclude that the Missouri Higher Education Loan Authority is “an instrumentality of Missouri”); Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 486 (citing Lebron when referencing parties’ agreement that the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (“PCAOB”) “is ‘part of the Government’ for constitutional purposes”); Amtrak II, 575 U.S. at 54–55 (explaining Lebron “provides necessary instruction” and “teaches that, for purposes of Amtrak’s status as a federal actor or instrumentality under the Constitution, the practical reality of federal control and supervision prevails over Congress’ disclaimer of Amtrak’s governmental status”); Kerpen v. Metro. Wash. Airports Auth., 907 F.3d 152, 158–59 (4th Cir. 2018) (applying Lebron to conclude that the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority (“MWAA”) is not “a federal entity” because “MWAA was not created by the federal government” and “is not controlled by the federal government”); Montilla v. Fed. Nat’l Mortg. Ass’n, 999 F.3d 751, 759–61 (1st Cir. 2021) (applying Lebron to conclude that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are not government actors).

No. 23-10520

industry. Again, contrast this with Amtrak, which Congress created “to avert the threatened extinction of passenger trains in the United States” and for other goals Congress itself “establish[ed].” Id. at 383.

Third, the federal government does not “control[] the operation of the [Authority],” nor has it “retain[ed] for itself permanent authority to appoint a majority of the [Authority’s] directors.” Ibid. To the contrary, the government has no role in appointing the Authority’s Board. Once again, contrast this with Amtrak—where a majority of its directors was appointed by the President. Id. at 397–98; see also Amtrak II, 575 U.S. at 51 (observing that seven of nine Amtrak board members “are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate”); cf. Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 484, 484–85 (noting the PCAOB—despite being statutorily deemed “private”—is a “Government-created, Government-appointed entity,” whose five members are “appointed . . . by the [SEC]”).

Instead of engaging with Lebron, Gulf Coast argues that Lebron’s analysis is not “the only way” to tell whether a corporation is a government instrumentality. That takes too narrow a view of precedent, however. Lebron canvassed “the long history of corporations created and participated in by the United States” and set out a detailed analysis to determine whether a particular corporation—despite its designation as “private”—counts as a government instrument for constitutional purposes. See 513 U.S. at 386, 386–91. That is precisely the question we must answer with respect to the Authority. How can we, as an inferior court, simply bypass Lebron? We cannot.

Gulf Coast tries to offer us a way around Lebron, but it is a dead end. Gulf Coast argues that Lebron addressed only government-created corporations “that in no way exercised government power.” But Lebron did not limit itself in that way—to the contrary, it relied on cases where Congress turned to private corporations to “accomplish purely governmental purposes.” 513 U.S. at 395 (quoting Cherry Cotton Mills, Inc. v. United States, 327 U.S. 536, 539 (1946)).²⁵ Furthermore, the corporation actually addressed in Lebron—Amtrak—itself exercised regulatory power, as the Supreme Court, the D.C. Circuit, and our court have all recognized. See Amtrak II, 575 U.S. at 51 (“Amtrak . . . cannot constitutionally be granted the regulatory power[.]” (citation and quotation omitted)); Amtrak I, 721 F.3d at 671 (“No case prefigures the unprecedented regulatory powers delegated to Amtrak.”); Horsemen’s I, 53 F.4th at 889 (discussing how Congress gave “regulatory power to the ‘economically self-interested Amtrak’” (citation omitted)).

Gulf Coast also argues that, to determine whether directors of a private entity are “Officers of the United States,” we should focus on their duration in office and the nature of the entity’s power. We disagree. The two principal cases Gulf Coast relies on for this argument addressed whether individuals already part of the government should be considered “Officers.” So, Buckley examined whether Federal Election Commission appointees wielded “significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States.” 424 U.S. at 126. And Lucia v. SEC applied this same test to SEC ALJs. 585 U.S. 237, 244–45 (2018). Gulf Coast urges us to extend Buckley and Lucia well beyond their facts to analyze whether persons in a private entity are “Officers.” Even if we were inclined to take that step, however, Lebron would remain an insuperable hurdle. As explained, Lebron addressed when a private entity qualifies as part of the government for constitutional purposes.

²⁵ See also Inland Waterways Corp. v. Young, 309 U.S. 517, 524 n.4 (1940) (“The corporations, of course, perform ‘governmental’ functions.” (citation omitted)); id. at 522 (“The banking system which Congress thus established embodied a blend of governmental and private purposes.”).

No. 23-10520

That is precisely the question before us. Post-Lebron, no case has applied Buckley to private actors. Instead, the Supreme Court has repeatedly applied Lebron for three decades. See supra note 23. We are not at liberty to displace the Supreme Court's governing framework.²⁶

Finally, Gulf Coast argues that if Lebron is the test, then the federal government can simply vest all executive power in a private corporation and avoid the Appointments Clause. This argument ignores the role of the private nondelegation doctrine. The government cannot delegate core governmental powers to unsupervised private parties. Pittston, 368 F.3d at 394. A private entity can only act "subordinately to an agency with authority and surveillance over it." Horsemen's I, 53 F.4th at 881 (quotations omitted). The private nondelegation doctrine thus corrals any attempts to evade Lebron by giving unaccountable governmental power to a pre-existing private entity.

In sum, Lebron is the governing test to determine whether an entity is private or public and, under that test, the Authority is a private entity not subject to Article II's Appointments Clause.

E. Anti-Commandeering Challenge

Finally, we turn to Gulf Coast's argument that HISA unconstitutionally commandeers state officials. The Constitution forbids Congress from "command[ing] the States' officers, or those of their political subdivisions, to administer or enforce a federal regulatory program." Printz

²⁶ That principle also answers Gulf Coast's reliance on a 2007 Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC") opinion. The opinion argued that the Appointments Clause applies to someone with significant and continuing government authority, whether he is a private or a government employee. Officers of the United States Within the Meaning of the Appointments Clause, 31 Op. O.L.C. 73, 121-22 (2007). If the opinion was suggesting its analysis as an alternative to Lebron (a decision, it should be noted, the opinion cited, see id. at 121), that is a suggestion only the Supreme Court could act upon, not a circuit court bound by Lebron.

No. 23-10520

v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 935 (1997); see also New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 165, 188 (1992). Gulf Coast argues HISA violates that principle by coercing state racing commissions to remit fees to fund the Authority’s operations. If state officials refuse, the Authority collects fees directly from covered persons—but, in that event, HISA prohibits the state from imposing taxes or fees to finance the state’s own horseracing programs. See § 3052(f). This scheme, argues Gulf Coast, “puts a gun to the head of Texas” by coercing state officials to administer a federal program rather than a state program.

The problem with this claim, as the district court pointed out, is that Gulf Coast lacks standing to raise it. Specifically, Gulf Coast’s alleged injury—that it prefers Texas’s racetrack safety rules to HISA’s—is “no injury at all.” Black, 672 F. Supp. 3d at 250. As the district court correctly reasoned, “[a] party cannot establish constitutional injury by suggesting that he may be subject to rules he does not prefer.” Ibid.; see also, e.g., Consumers’ Rsch. v. Consumer Prod. Safety Comm’n, 91 F.4th 342, 350 (5th Cir. 2024) (holding that “merely being subject to . . . regulations, in the abstract, does not create an injury”).

On appeal, Gulf Coast fails to explain how the district court erred. It merely argues that the coercive pressure the funding scheme allegedly places on Texas will lead it to implement HISA’s rules rather than the current Texas regulations, which makes Gulf Coast subject to “a new set of unwanted (federal) regulations.” Again, though, this does not explain why Gulf Coast experiences an injury sufficient to assert an anti-commandeering challenge to HISA.

IV. CONCLUSION

In sum, we affirm the district court’s judgment that (1) Congress’s recent amendment to HISA cured the private nondelegation flaw in the

No. 23-10520

Authority's rulemaking power; (2) HISA does not violate due process; (3) the Authority's directors are not subject to the Appointments Clause under Lebron; and (4) Gulf Coast lacks standing to challenge HISA on anti-commandeering grounds.

We reverse the district court's judgment in one respect. Insofar as HISA is enforced by private entities that are not subordinate to the FTC, we DECLARE that HISA violates the private nondelegation doctrine.

Accordingly, the district court's judgment is AFFIRMED in part and REVERSED in part.
