dismissed the complaint for lack of jurisdiction because the claims were frivolous. The district court also denied leave to amend the complaint.

The plaintiff named in the complaint is said to be the Atakapa Indian de Creole Nation. Its attorney is Edward Moses, Jr., who styles himself as “Christian Emperor de Orleans,” “His Majesty,” and the “Trust Protector” of the Nation. As we remarked in a similarly implausible suit, Moses appears to be the suit’s “real plaintiff.” See Atakapa Indian de Creole Nation v. Louisiana, 943 F.3d 1004, 1006 (5th Cir. 2019).

In 2018, Moses filed a lawsuit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana. The district court dismissed that lawsuit on the basis of sovereign immunity. We affirmed on the basis that the district court lacked jurisdiction because the claims were frivolous. Id. at 1007.

As the magistrate judge explained when recommending dismissal of this lawsuit, Plaintiff’s claims here are similar to those he alleged in 2018. Plaintiff invokes myriad federal laws and treaties yet makes no coherent argument as to why he is entitled to relief under any of them. The defendants include corporations and local, national and international leaders, among others, but Plaintiff does not explain their connection to the allegations. For the reasons we explained in Atakapa Indian de Creole Nation, we hold that the district court properly dismissed this lawsuit for lack of jurisdiction because the claims were frivolous. See id.

The district court also denied leave to amend the complaint. Although the district court did not explain its reasons, we can affirm that denial “if the futility of amendment is readily apparent and the record reflects ample and obvious grounds for denying leave to amend.” Heinze v. Tesco Corp., 971 F.3d 475, 485 (5th Cir. 2020). We hold that the futility of any amendment here was readily apparent and justified by the record.

AFFIRMED.
